City of Manassas Mayor Attends Mayors' Conference

City of Manassas, VA . . . This week, Mayor Michelle Davis-Younger is attending the U.S. Conference of Mayors (USCM) 92nd Winter Meeting in Washington, DC, bringing together a bipartisan group of more than 250 mayors from across the country. The three-day conference provides an opportunity for mayors to discuss the biggest challenges facing cities, collaborate, share best practices and engage with top federal officials on the issues most important to cities.

“As a first-time attendee at the winter meeting of the USCM, networking with so many great mayors across the country, along with the informative sessions and panels that address areas of concern we all share from poverty and homelessness to AI, will allow me to develop, implement and share many new ideas to better assist the City of Manassas in reaching new and higher levels of success,” said Mayor Michelle Davis-Younger. “I’m so appreciative of this amazing opportunity to attend and let all here know how great our city is!”

The meeting features conversations with national leaders, including President Joe Biden, Vice President Kamala Harris, top Cabinet officials, and members of Congress as well as other leaders in the public and private sectors. On Friday, January 19, the final day of the three-day Winter Meeting, Mayor Davis-Younger will visit the White House for the meeting with President Biden.

“Our cities and communities are stronger when we work together. The U.S. Conference of Mayors Winter Meeting brings mayors from across the country to exchange their best ideas, highlight emerging challenges, and find solutions that work. It also allows us to use our shared voice to advocate for federal policies that are critical to the health of American cities. Once again, mayors will show what can be accomplished when politics are set aside and the well-being of residents is prioritized,” said USCM President Reno (NV) Mayor Hillary Schieve.
