Red Cliff News & Updates

COVID-19 Community Updates

Various Tribal programs, services, and events have been canceled or temporarily suspended in our efforts to limit the spread of COVID-19.

An up-to-date list can be found on the Tribal Facebook page, and is updated continuously throughout each day.

You can also find a series of video updates from the Red Cliff Health Division on the Tribal Facebook page.
Stay Home Resolution ends, no motion to extend

The Red Cliff Tribal Council’s Stay at Home Resolution ended on June 12, 2020. There was no motion to extend the resolution at Tribal Council’s most recent meeting.

While the resolution has expired, Tribal Council and Red Cliff Health officials encourage community members to continue practicing safe personal hygiene and social distancing measures.

For information related to health guidelines, contact the Red Cliff Community Health Center at 715-779-3707.

Area Residents Test for COVID-19

Red Cliff Tribal Members and surrounding area residents took advantage of a free drive up testing event on June 11 at the Legendary Waters parking lot. The testing event was coordinated by Red Cliff Health officials and the Wisconsin National Guard.

Over 350 people got tested at the event. The number of positive and negative tests is expected to be shared by the health department this week. No personal identifying information will be given about anyone who has tested positive or negative.

Event coordinators also gave away over 500 cloth masks.

Last week, Tribal Council Member and Red Cliff elder Marvin Defoe encouraged Red Cliff residents to get tested.

"If you find out you are carrying COVID-19, you will be able to help protect our elders and community members," said Defoe. "This is about helping and protecting the community."

The Red Cliff Health Department urges community members to continue practicing proper personal hygiene and appropriate social distancing.

Red Cliff Campgrounds Opened to Tribal Members

Red Cliff’s Buffalo Bay and Point Detour Campgrounds are now open to Tribal members and their families. There is currently no camping fee associated with these sites.

General amenities will not be available to campers, however portable restroom facilities will be provided. Families are encouraged to continue to follow safe social distancing guidelines as the Tribe begins Phase I of reopening. While no date is set for the beginning of Phase II, it is scheduled to include the reopening of the Marina and Legendary Waters Snack Bar (takeout only).
All reopening phases will be at the advisement of our health professionals and Red Cliff Emergency Response Team.

Council Statement on George Floyd, Protests

June 10, 2020

The Red Cliff Tribal Council stands in solidarity with the black community in the wake of the murder of George Floyd at the hands of the Minneapolis police. For far too long, black and native people have been disproportionately subjected to unwarranted violence at the hands of police. Many of our tribal members have experienced this firsthand.

While recent events have now given this issue center stage in the national conversation, many of our tribal members realize the only thing that has truly changed is that the curtain has been lifted because of our digital age and the ability of everyday citizens to record such reprehensible conduct by those sworn to protect and serve.

We encourage and support lawful protest and demonstration designed to shed a light on police brutality, and we support the demilitarization of the police and a return to community policing. We stand in support of all lawful protests and demonstrations designed to end police brutality against people of color. As a nation we cannot say that “All Lives Matter” until native and black lives matter.

Thank you for your support!
Red Cliff Police Chief Kyle Cadotte would like to send a Chi Miigwech to the community and to his fellow officers for the efforts put in during the COVID-19 pandemic.

RCPD, like all other tribal entities, has been forced to adapt to stringent sanitary and safety precautions. Cadotte said he is extremely impressed with the officers' dedication to the community and the job.

"It's been a new level of seeing the officers step up, and not one time has any officer missed a shift since the pandemic began," said Cadotte. "They are always impressing me with their endurance and resilience, and the fact that not a single shift was left open while we are all facing and fighting the pandemic is admirable."

Community members are encouraged to continue to reach out to RCPD in times of need at 715-779-3733.

Elder Abuse Awareness Month

By Nora Cadotte, Family Violence Prevention Advocate

Boozhoo Red Cliff Community,
June is Elder Abuse Awareness month. The Red Cliff Family Violence Prevention Program would like to share some important information with all of you. Abuse is not a comfortable topic to speak about especially when it affects our children, women, men, and our Sacred Elders. Our Elders guide us, teach us, pray for us, and carry on our culture and traditions.

When I was researching this topic, I came across many terrifying stories and articles. You never think that this goes on in our community but, I would like to share a personal story that happened right here in our community. To one of our elders.

My Grandma was over 80 years old, lived alone and was a widow. She was strong willed, opinionated and very independent. She also had a big heart and would help anyone in need. One summer day, a knock came to her door. It was summer time and she always needed help with outdoor yard work. She hadn’t called anyone, but this young adult just appeared at her doorstep. She took pride in keeping her lawn neat and tidy. This person said he was looking for work and offered to mow her lawn for twenty bucks. He didn't have any equipment, a lawn mower or fuel but if she had one he could do it. Grandma being the kindhearted woman she was, agreed to this arrangement. She gave the garage key to him and told him to go to the garage and make sure she had gas. He did what she requested and came back and told her, there was no gas. She gave him twenty bucks and sent him up the road to purchase gas. He returned a couple hours later and told her some story about helping someone out who was in distress. Well, the lawn eventually got mowed that day and Grandma never got any change from her twenty. She paid him twenty more and he said he would check in a week to see if she needed her lawn cut again. She thanked him and off he went, in the direction of the casino.

A few days later he stopped by her house again. Just said he was checking up on her, to make sure she was okay. She visited with him for a few minutes and thought what a wonderful young man, so caring. After their visit he asked Grandma if she had a few bucks he could get because he needed some smokes. Grandma didn’t care to support bad habits but, he seemed so nice, she gave him some cash.

This goes on for about a month before she realizes she is missing large amounts of cash. Her pocketbook was always next to her recliner. She finally confides in me and I am suspicious. We talk about who has been in her house and she tells me about this fine young man.

To make a long story short, I confronted this person and told him to never come around here again. This didn’t deter him so, my husband and her son also told him to get lost. Finally, after we threatened to call the authorities he left her alone. About a week later, I saw him down the road at another widow’s house. Predator, targeting our vulnerable elders.

So, it can happen here. We need to watch out for our Elders.

From the Department of Justice Elder Abuse Statistics:

Rural Elder Abuse Research

Elder abuse in rural and tribal communities within the United States is an under-studied and complex issue. A multidisciplinary perspective is necessary to successfully grapple with issues of rural and tribal elder abuse which have both public health and legal implications. The following research is pulled from many overlapping disciplines, published in the United States that pertain to issues related to elder abuse among rural or tribal older adults.

Click HERE for statistics on elder abuse.
More often than not the abuser is someone we know. Sad. The abuse can be physical, verbal, emotional, sexual and/or financial.

In these changing times we all need to be aware. We need to look after ourselves, our families, friends, co-workers, our community and especially our Elders.

Check on that elderly neighbor, give them a call just to say hi. Your thoughtfulness and kindness will be appreciated.

Several major league sports teams have posted on social media to condemn racism and show support for Black Lives Matter protests sweeping the globe.

In support of #BlackoutTuesday, when many brands and organizations posted support for the Black community in response to police killings, the Washington Redskins football team tweeted a black square captioned with the hashtag. The Atlanta Braves baseball team tweeted a lengthy statement opposing “any and all discriminatory acts, racism and injustice.” The Cleveland Indians baseball team said they were “committed to making a difference.” The Chicago Blackhawks hockey team—who use the disembodied head of a Native American man wearing feathers in his hair as a logo—said they were “taking this time to listen and learn.”

But the statements struck many Native Americans as paradoxical in light of years of criticism aimed at those teams for the names, logos, mascots and chants that indigenous groups find offensive—and racist.

“The tweet by the Washington Redskins rings hollow to me,” said Roberto Borrero (Guainía | Nissia Basina was born & raised in Red Cliff. A Bayfield High School graduate, she married her high school sweetheart after a short stint at Bemidji University. During her husband’s military career they moved several times; travel is now one of her favorite hobbies! She & her family have visited nearly every state and parts of Mexico. They have come back home to raise their 2 daughters, Allison (6) & Rylee (3) around family & cultural values.

"If the team was really interested in standing in solidarity for racial justice, they would change their name from the dictionary-defined racial slur they continue to use," Borrero said. "As an indigenous person, I feel their tweet comes off as tone deaf, not woke. Violence comes in many forms, some more subtle than others. Indigenous Peoples are not your mascots."

The Redskins, Braves, Indians and Blackhawks are among several American sports teams that still use Native American slurs or imagery (the Kansas City Chiefs are another). All of the teams have been criticized, or even sued, by Native American groups asking that the names and traditions be changed.

The Atlanta Braves retired their longtime mascot Chief Noc-A-Homa in 1986. But controversy remains over the franchise’s signature “tomahawk chop” and foam tomahawks handed out to fans at games. Last October, the Braves said they would engage in off-season talks with Native American groups after public criticism from St. Louis Cardinals relief pitcher Ryan Helsley, a Cherokee Nation member.

The Redskins have been mired in heated battles for decades over the team’s name, which is widely considered an anti-Native American slur. The team has been sued by Native American leaders, including Suzan Shown Harjo and Amanda Blackhorse, in trademark court, who tried and failed to convince courts that a racial slur cannot legally be trademarked.

On Wednesday morning, Blackhorse suggested in a Facebook post that the Redskins should “sit down.” She did not respond to an Adweek request for comment sent Tuesday.

In 2013, a letter signed by 51 faith leaders asked the NFL to change the Redskins’ name, saying “words can cause great pain.” More than once, President Barack Obama asked the team to change the name. In 2015, Obama said it was time for sports teams to “break stereotypes” and praised Adidas for working with schools to rebrand Native American mascots and logos.

“I don’t know if Adidas made the same offer to a certain NFL team here in Washington,” Obama said at the 2015 White House Tribal Nations Conference. “But they might want to think about that as well.”

The National Congress of American Indians has repeatedly opposed the use of the Redskins name. In a lengthy resolution adopted by the National Congress of American Indians in 2018, the group explained the roots of the term and why it is deeply offensive to indigenous Americans.

“The Washington team’s R-word name derives from policies of colonization in which bounties were paid for the bloody skins of American Indian and Alaska Native men, women and children as proof of their killings,” the resolution reads.

On Wednesday morning, the NCAI took a more hopeful tone in a statement emailed to Adweek questioning whether the teams’ support for the Black community might indicate more changes to come.

“We can only hope that today’s #BlackoutTuesday gestures of solidarity by these professional sports teams are indications of their commitment to racial equity and respect for the lives and humanity of all people of color,” said Kevin J. Allis, CEO of the National Congress of American Indians. “But these teams have a civic and moral responsibility to demonstrate that this commitment is genuine by taking real action to make our society an equitable, respectful, and just society for all Americans.”
Record Water Levels Could Continue On Great Lakes Over Next 6 Months

From WPR
By Danielle Kaeding

Water levels are expected to be near or above record highs on most of the Great Lakes over the next six months, with several lakes already at record levels.

Deanna Apps, physical scientist for the Detroit District of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, said Lakes Michigan, Huron and Erie set new records for May water levels, with above-normal rainfall recorded last month.

She said levels on Lakes Michigan and Huron, which the Corps of Engineers measures together, dropped about half as much as they usually do between late fall and early winter — and as a result, the lakes have set water level records every month since January.

"We continue to see high waters, especially on some of the upper lakes — Lake Superior through Lake Erie. Very close to or above record highs on some of those lakes," said Apps. "It's shown in our forecast to continue over the next six months."

Lakes Michigan and Huron rose 3 inches in May to 581.96 feet, surpassing the previous record for the month set in 1986.

Both Lakes Erie and St. Clair, the latter of which lies between Ontario and Michigan, surpassed a record set last year. Lake Erie has records each month since February, with a 574.41 foot water level in May. Lake St. Clair rose to 577.36 feet in May.

Lakes Superior and Ontario were both down in May compared to the same time last year. Lake Superior fell 5 inches to 602.49 feet, while Lake Ontario fell 13 inches to 247.24 ft.

Apps noted water levels on Lake Ontario are still expected to be above average for the next six months, although levels on the lake are not expected to be as close to the record highs seen on the other lakes.

High water levels on Lake Ontario caused severe flooding and millions of dollars in damage along shoreline communities last year, sparking outrage among residents and with New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo. He announced last fall that the state was suing the International Joint Commission, which oversees outflows established by the International Lake Ontario - St. Lawrence River Board. He argued the commission failed to manage water levels there.

Apps said officials have been trying to maximize outflows from the lake as much as possible while balancing other water uses, including safe commercial navigation. She noted drier conditions in May likely prevented the lake from rising more this spring, adding that regulating outflows can only do so much to manage water levels.

"They're not able to help control lake levels or prevent extreme high or low water levels, and we know that because we've seen record high water levels over the last couple of years," said Apps.

Apps said shoreline flooding and erosion will continue on the upper lakes this summer as Lakes Superior, Michigan and Huron enter their seasonal rise.
